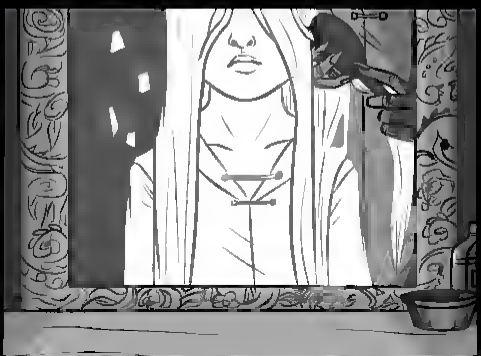
Chapter 3

I've always hated the color white.



Everything it stands for -

Purity...

Innocence...

Magic...

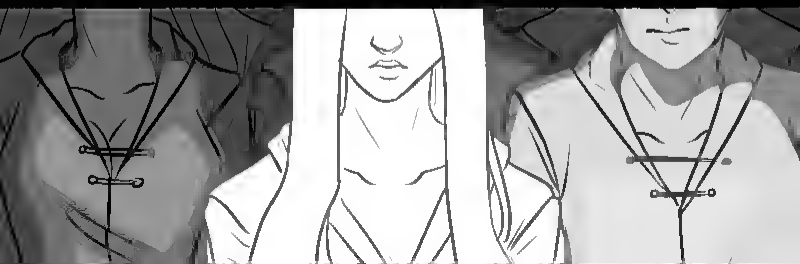
It's all bullshit.

The truth about write...

...is that it's only white...

...because it reflects every other color.

It has these colors thrust upon it and is changed,



molded into something new and, in their eyes,

perfect.

Whether it wants to or not.

No, I've always hated the color white.

It stains too easily.

Hey sis

45

Kier!
How was the bachelor party last night?

Please don't mention the party.

My head hasn't been in the best shape all day.

Ugh, you too? I've had this killer migraine since this morning.

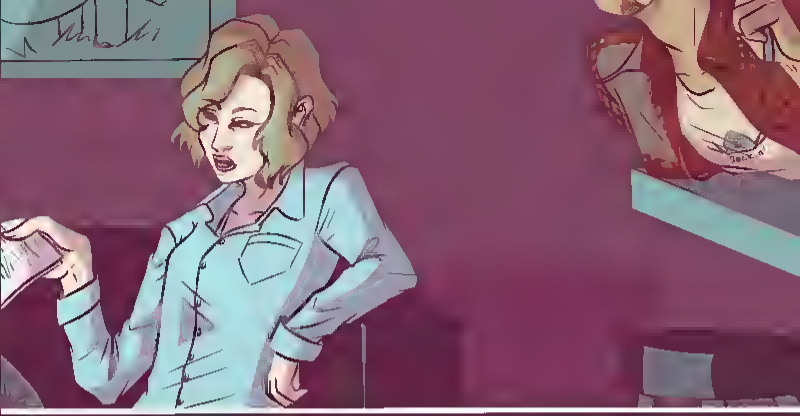
You take some pills?

What do you want for dinner?

I'm good
There are some leftovers in the fridge if you want.

How's the research going?

I'm actually on the brink of something -
Is that what all this is?



I told you not to leave your notes on the coffee table man.

Looks more interesting than being an assistant to the Governor, though. I'd take it over my paperwork any day.
But you're liking it though, right?

I'm just glad you can finally focus on your studies...
Now that Mum's gone
Liz.
Don't stay up too late, yeah?
